THE ISLE OF FLOWERS.

There's an Isle of flowers in the distant seas,
Fanned by no gale but the summer breeze—
The snow-quiet hangs not her bright wreaths there,
Nor mingles her breath with the balmy air;
Nor binds with her sparkling diamond chain,
The silver lake, nor the dark blue main—
And birds are there with plumage gay
As the western heaven at the close of day:
Shall we launch our bark, my love, and go
To this beautiful Isle? Ah no! Ah no!
Our kindred hearts, and smiling eyes,
We might not meet 'neath those sunny skies!
And wheresoever the footsteps roam,
The soul, like an exile, sighs for Home.

When the sun has set there, the stars arise
Like lamps of pearl in the azure skies—
And the birds sing sweet, in the orange bowers,
Midst golden fruit and snow-white flowers;
O'er the amber earth bright diamonds glow,
In the waters forests of coral grow;
The cinnamon groves shed rich perfume:
Can the soul meet there, with care or gloom?
Then love, shall we launch our bark and go,
To this fragrant clime? Ah! no! Ah! no!
We could not meet in those spicy lands,
With such generous souls, and friendly hands;
And still where'er the footsteps roam
The exiled spirit turns to Home! ROSA.

HOPE IN HEAVEN.

The dew that glitters on the flower,
Ambrosial scents exciting,
At blush of morn, or twilight hour,
When sunshine hues are flitting,
The drop that melts in beauty's eye,
From founts of pity stealing,
Or e'en the blush of crimson dye
The soul's chaste thoughts revealing,
Is not so soothing, nor so meet,
To hearts by sorrow riven,
As the bright hope, divinely sweet,
The hope of gaining Heaven.

The zephyr wafted o'er the vale,
Beset with countless roses,
Deliciously perfumes the gale,
And gentler sighs discloses,
The tender tones affection breathes,
When the mild barrier's broken,
And the first tribute love receives
A kiss in hallowed token,
Are sweet—yet idle, tasteless things
Compared with faith that's given,
To raise the souls' imaginings
On wings of hope to Heaven.

TO ——.

Ah chide me not—and check that tear,
I did not mean to force it there,
Or yet thy heart to pain!
No—sooner would I now resign,
Each dearest hope of bliss that's mine,
Than wet thy cheek again.

Come, banish every doubt or fear,
Nor think my bosom cold, severe,
'Tis pride shall ever be,
To teach thy feelings to believe,
It was not offer'd to deceive,
And lives alone for thee.

SONG.

Oh! ask you fair sun, as so bright thro' the sky
He rolls in his orbit of glory on high,
If he looks on a sight
That's more lovely and bright,
Than the patriot devotedly marching to die!

The standard of freedom unfurl'd to the wind,
He sighs as he leaves his dear valley behind,
But the sacred just cause,
Which the patriot draws
His good blade to defend, is the balm of his mind.

He seems like a god as to battle he moves,
How firmly he treads on the land that he loves,
Then his soul sparkling high,
Brightly beams thro' his eye,
And his right unto freedom his valor well proves!

He stands or he falls in the front of his foes;
Strength sits on his arm, and death waits on his blows;
If he falls in the fight,
Then does victory bright,
To her arms sweetly soothe him to death's calm repose.

LINES

Inscribed to Mrs. Lydia H——d.

How flattering is Friendship—how delightful her joys,
How fickle—how seldom we find her appear—
How often life's sweet swelling bliss she destroys,
When most her fair charms we are taught to revere.

How oft thro' her bowers I've fearlessly cursed,
And wove as I knelt at her fairy built shrine,
A wreath for those bosoms my soul dearly loved,
But they drooped 'neath the touch they were formed to entwine.

Sweet friend, then beware, her allurements are vain,
Beware of the tones of her magical tongue,
She may seemingly sigh o'er the cares you sustain,
Yet joyless inside when the bosom is wrung.

THE MORALIST.

LORD CHATHAM'S TESTIMONY IN FAVOR OF RELIGION.

(From a Letter addressed to his Son.)

"I come now to the part of the advice I have to offer you, which most nearly concerns your welfare, and upon which every good and honorable purpose of your life will assuredly turn; I mean the keeping up in your heart the true sentiments of religion. If you are not right towards God, you can never be so towards man. The noblest sentiment of the human breast is here brought to the test. Is gratitude in the number of a man's virtues? If it is, the highest benefactor demands the warmest returns of gratitude, love and praise: Ingratum qui dixerit omnia dixit. If a man wants this virtue, where there are infinite obligations to excite and quicken it, he will be likely to want all others towards his fellow creatures, whose utmost gifts are poor, compared with those he daily receives at the hand of his never-failing, Almighty Friend. Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth, is big with the deepest wisdom. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and an upright heart, that is understanding. This is eternally true, whether the wits and rakes of Cambridge allow it or not. Nay, I must add of this religious wisdom, her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace, whatever your young men may think of their bottle, a tainted health, and shattered constitution. Hold fast, therefore, by this sheet anchor of happiness, Religion; you will often want it in times of most danger, the storms and tempests of life. Cherish true religion as preciously, as you will fly, with abhorrence and contempt, superstition and enthusiasm. The first is the perfection and glory of the human nature; the two last, the depravation and disgrace of it. Remember, the essence of Religion is a heart void of offence towards God and Man; not subtle speculative opinions, but an active, vital principle of faith."

PIETY.

Man alone is capable of stretching his ideas beyond this sublunary world, and of experiencing in any degree the consolations of piety. He alone can form an idea of an Almighty Benificent Being, who delights in conferring happiness on all his creatures. It is man alone, who, in contemplating the divine perfections, feels it impossible to withhold that spontaneous homage and grateful adoration which constitute the essence of true piety.—From this source he derives a consolation in all afflictions, and a solace in every distress. When mankind, through ignorance or error, forsake or contemn him; when all before him is darkness, and a gloomy foreboding of future distress impresses his mind with a melancholy tending to despair, he then flies to this Supreme Being for relief. He pours forth his soul at the throne of mercy, and in conscious rectitude of mind, he exults in the internal perception, that though all created beings should unjustly blame him, yet to the unerring judge of all the universe, to whose all seeing eye the inmost thoughts of his heart have been open at all times, their testimony availeth nothing. His weakness he feels; and the accidental deviations from purity which the frailties of mortality have induced, he sincerely deplores. To man is thus opened an unfailing source of consolation, of which no human power can deprive him.—In the depth of his several afflictions, he can look up to his God and protector with comfort. From the darkness of the closest dungeon his voice will be heard; and while surrounded with every possible distress, he can look forward with tranquility to that awful event which shall put a final period to his earthly sufferings, and administer to him an entrance into the mansions of the blessed.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

At the close of the violent struggle that immediately succeeded the breaking out of the French Revolution, the nobility of that country, who had nearly all, with the exception of those who stimulated the Rebellions, and those who suffered under its horrors, left the scene of desolation and death, slowly returned to the metropolis, and in the recollection of past escapes and possession of present security, strove to forget if possible, the event which had expatriated them, and its consequences.

Among those who now appeared and took possession of their splendid mansions in Paris, was Count D'Arville, a nobleman about forty years of age, who had on the first alarm fled to England with his daughter, now a lovely girl of sixteen, and his wife.—He had also taken with him, the Chevalier De la Forblesse, the only son of his eldest sister, who had with her dying words committed him to the charge of his uncle. These were the personages that composed the family of the Count, who, with feelings not to be described and only to be felt by persons in similar situations, again beheld the city which had given him birth, and in which he hoped to spend the remainder of his days.

The Count D'Arville had at an early period lost his only surviving parent, and at the age of twenty-two, actuated by a roving disposition and a desire to see the world, which few can restrain, and none entirely over-rule, set out to make a tour of observation and amusement, or as it has been universally called the grand tour of Europe. After a year and an half spent in traversing the continent, he set foot in London, intending to start from that place to Paris immediately. His previous acquaintance with the metropolis had made him perfectly well acquainted with its geography, and he was leisurely proceeding up one of the most frequented streets, little regarding the crowd which surrounded him, when a violent crash assailed his ears. He looked around to discover the cause, and perceived a coach or the remnant of one, dragged impetuously by two furious horses. It had struck with all the force its velocity could give, against a post, and with the shock had dismounted the driver. In it was the form of a lady, who had fainted through fear, and whose fate, considering the manner in which the coach was dragged along, seemed inevitable. The astonished and frightened citizens who were witnesses of the scene, seemed more provident of their own safety, by the receding motions they made nearer the houses, while none were brave or rash enough to risk their safety in humanely endeavoring to stop the further progress of the horses. Count D'Arville, with an impulse with him perfectly natural, rushed into the street-way, and with all the energy and force, that youth and manly vigour had supplied him with, seized the reins of the horse nearest him. He found that his force was inadequate to the task, for the horse he held urged on by the other, could not be restrained, and he was on the point of being thrown, and trodden on by the animals, when with admirable presence of mind, hardly to be expected from the bravest, stunted as he was, he bethought him of his travelling pistols, which yet remained in his pocket, primed and loaded. He pulled one forth, and in an instant the ball was lodged in the head of the horse he held. His fall retarded the progress of the other, and by the assistance of the crowd, who now, that the greatest danger was over, flocked to his support, he was enabled to stop his flight altogether. His next care was to attend to the lady, whom with great care he removed from the coach, and carried to a contiguous house. In due time, by the application of proper restoratives, the lady recovered her senses, and thanked the Count impressively for her escape; while, with all the gallantry of a French Chevalier, and which few would have omitted, he insisted upon conducting her safe home, which was not objected to.

The lady he had been so singularly successful in preserving, proved to be Lady Elizabeth Markham, only daughter of Lord Freeman, one of the richest and noblest peers of Great Britain. Whether the Count was impressed with a sense of her beauty, or Lady Elizabeth with gratitude most, is hard to determine, but in due course of time, the fickle god had mutually wounded them, and, as often happens in such cases, they were married. The only fruit of this union, was our heroine Mademoiselle Elizabeth D'Arville, which name, though strangely sounded with the French one that follows, was by the persuasion of her mother given to her.

These then, with the addition of the Chevalier De la Forblesse, already mentioned, were the persons who composed the family of the Count, who was now in his forty-second year, and, on a fine spring morning, after their return from England, where they had lived with Lord Freeman, who was yet alive, were seated around their social breakfast table. The consul had at this time been installed in all his dignities, and the commotions which shook this then unhappy kingdom were partially subsided.

"Elizabeth, my dear," said the Count, addressing his wife, while his countenance shewed that the topic he was about to speak on was of importance—"Elizabeth, my dear," said he, "I have seriously thought of it lately, and have as seriously resolved."

"On what, my dear," said the affectionate wife. "It will be a heavy pang," continued he, "but the cause requires it; our daughter, our Elizabeth"—Here the daughter of whom he had spoken, regarded him earnestly, and, as she left her seat and familiarly patted her father on the cheek, he was observed to wipe away a tear which had unconsciously stolen down.

"Tush, tush," said he, "I forget myself—as I said, our daughter, the troubled times have interfered much with her education, and even now when they are still afloat, we cannot hope to have her instructed in a proper manner. I have thought, and have resolved"—

"With my permission," interrupted the mother, good humouredly.

"I have thought," resumed the Count, his feelings perhaps preventing reply to the interruption, "of sending her to London, where, under the care of her grand-father, she can receive that attention and completion of her education, which the situation of France prevents at present. It will be a bitter pang, the separation"

"Bitter indeed," said the Countess, feelingly, while a tear started in her eye, "but as it is for the best, we must bear it."

"Nobly said"—interrupted the Count, "and what think you of it," said he, addressing himself to his daughter.

"Oh, my dear Papa," answered his daughter with extreme artlessness and simplicity, "I shall be very much pleased."

"How," said her father, "pleased at the idea of leaving your father and mother in France, when the next plot or rising may bring death with it."

"I didn't mean that, Papa, but—when I was at London before, I was so much pleased with the Opera."—"And was the Opera the only place that delighted you," asked her mother.

"Oh! no, not the only place, there were a great many others, but the Opera!"

"The Opera again? the girl is mad," said the Count. Here the young Demoiselle finding she had spoken too freely, stammered and endeavored to explain while her cheeks were completely suffused with blushes. The Count and Countess thinking that perhaps her confusion was caused by being too strictly and sharply spoken to, forbore further enquiry. Preparations were now made for Elizabeth's setting out to England the next week, and the Chevalier De la Forblesse was fixed on as her attendant and protector.

While the family of D'Arville are making all necessary preparations for the intended journey, and its elder members striving philosophically to bear with calmness the separation that shortly followed, it may not be unnecessary to look back and explain the reason of the confusion so evidently displayed in Elizabeth's countenance at the mention of London and the Opera House. During the period of her late visit to England, the family were hospitably and elegantly entertained at the mansion of Lord Freeman, in Grosvenor Square. This reception, of course, brought the family into the first circle in London, and the company of the Count and Countess D'Arville was universally courted. The youth of the young heiress, being then but fifteen years of age precluded the possibility of her being brought into company, but as far as practicable, every means of gratification and amusement were allowed her by her indulgent parents and as indulgent grand-mother. Among the different places of amusement visited by the nobility and fashion, none at this time was so much frequented as the Opera House. To this place did the Count and Countess, together with numbers of their fashionable friends, often repair, and it was in this place, built to the honor of the "tuneful nine," that the young and beauteous Elizabeth was doomed to sacrifice her heart on the altar of that youthful god whose matchless power and superior prowess had brought to his throne Nobles, Princes, Emperors, and even Gods. It was on an evening shortly after the opening for the season, that the attraction of Madame Catalina had, together with the Count and family, drawn an overflowing house. The beauty of the interior display'd to so much advantage by light and the powers of scenic representation, was only equalled by the blaze of fashion that crowded the different tiers of boxes, and even the most respectable males assembled there had to seek refuge in the pit, from the impossibility of gaining situations above. The whole presented a tout ensemble only to be seen where a "far-famed" histrionic genius appears, and more to be enjoyed from its rare appearance. Among the beaux seated in the pit, was a young man of the name of Edward St. Clair, whose prepossessing exterior, and ease and gentility of manner, though they did not render him conspicuous among the crowd to a transient observer, yet when attention was directed towards him, were sufficient to cause him to be remarked with interest. The eyes of our heroine and St. Clair during the evening had repeatedly encountered each other, and served to bend the bow of the "youthful god," which afterwards was aimed with so much effect.

During the course of the season, whether by a desire of such amusement or not, is impossible to tell, our young heroine was frequently seen "among the gay and shining crowd" at the Opera House, and by a singular coincidence, St. Clair was always to be found. We will not say they went there expressly to see each other, oh, no! that would be presumptuous, but it is most certainly the case, that they frequented the Opera in an unusual manner, and when there, by accident perhaps, their eyes commenced and kept up during the evening, repeated vollies of that artillery which inflames though it does not consume, and conquers though it does not destroy. These repeated meetings, and likewise often passing in the street, were sufficient to impress each other's image on the coldest of hearts, but on the young and susceptible hearts of St. Clair and Elizabeth, it made a lasting and indelible impression, and when the time arrived when according to her father's arrangements, Elizabeth was to return to France, she left London with a heavy heart, constantly thinking on what she would suffer during her absence, which she feared would be forever. It is then easy to account for the emotion she evinced when she heard her father's resolution, and the anxiety she expressed for her departure for London.

On a fine May morning, when the "glorious luminary" had just arisen above the Eastern horizon, the bustle of servants, and the arrival of a splendid equipage at the door of the Count D'Arville's mansion, portended something of an unusual occurrence. The faces of the inqueys shone in bright unison with the orb that had just arisen, and bespoke an inward joy, such as is generally felt by the ennuie while enjoying the thoughts and anticipating the delights of an expected journey. But far different were the thoughts, the reflections and the anticipations of those within. The carriage that was placed before the door, was that which was destined to convey Elizabeth and the Chevalier, her protector on their journey to London. While her father and mother were experiencing a sorrow which they felt was difficult to conceal, Elizabeth thought she knew not why, that her journey would be a pleasant one, and felt assured that the pleasure she would experience in London would more than compensate her for the elopement from her parents. But while these feelings operated so powerfully upon the parents and the child, the Chevalier De la Forblesse had been unusually silent. To questions put by the Count, to well wishes expressed by them all, and the kind and repeated enquiries and services of the servants, he maintained a steady silence, which seemed so completely to signify his being deep in thought, that had it not been for the agonizing parting then about to take place, it would have been a subject of interest and scrutiny to the kind yet stern parents.

Our narrative is now about to leap over ten days of time in silence, and to direct attention to a spot which, although more than twenty miles distant from London, might from the questionable medium of population between crowded cities and the country be readily conceived to be the suburbs of that distinguished Metropolis. At the junction, just before the road directs you over an extensive heath, a party of gentlemen were discovered leisurely riding on horseback, with their horses' heads towards and just about entering the dreary plain. They were evidently a party of young men, six or seven in number, on some pleasurable expedition, full of life and mirth, and all seemed of noble demeanor, although from the attention that each, almost involuntarily paid to one of the party in particular, it might be imagined that he was the master spirit of the assembly. This gentleman, clad in a full blue riding suit, booted and spurred, and bearing an elevated porte was what the ladies of the present age would call beautiful—of a fine and proportionable figure, tall and commanding; features, regular, agreeable and animated; and manner, pleasant, graceful and unassuming; he seemed to be one upon whom Nature in one of her good humored intervals had bestowed unusual attention.

The party thus arranged and buoyant in spirits had already traversed something like two miles over the uncharitable heath, when the appearance of a large commodious Hotel, situated at its termination, considerably gladdened their feelings. Every thing about the Inn seemed bustle and confusion, and where the eye could for a moment rest on something inactive, it was only temporary, for the object was instantly seized with the same sympathetic activity. When the party of gentlemen arrived, and dismounting in the Court Yard, left their horses and portmanteaux in the care of the Ostler, and proceeded to the house in search of refreshment, they discovered the cause of the bustle they had previously noticed; a coach and four, with outriders, in splendid French liveries had just arrived, and the lady and gentleman for whose comfort in traveling the equipage was organized, were just crossing the Hall to ascend the stair-way which led to the ladies' parlour. The young gentleman, whose deportment was just noticed among the riding party, seemed struck when a hasty glance on both sides denoted a mutual recognition, and more particularly so when the lady leaving the side of her protector, precipitately directed her steps towards him, but almost immediately, as if a second determination had shewn her the impropriety of the measure, retraced her steps, placed her arm within that of the gentleman who conducted her, and with a quiet and hurried step, proceeded up stairs.

This extraordinary circumstance occurred and was ended with such rapidity, that none but the two persons who seemed most interested, observed it, and the gentlemen of the party a cheval, all desirous of immediate accommodation, very speedily repaired to a room which the good land-lady informed them was ready for their reception.

The pleasures of a good supper had passed away—the subsequent potations had exercised their accustomed influence on the party who enjoyed them, all except one, being free, merry and unrestrained—the ponderous mahogany clock in an angle of the Hall was striking eleven with its usual commanding voice, as if it were determined all should hear it, when its vicinity was somewhat disturbed by the slow, pensive motion of the young gentleman, the only one of the party who was uninfluenced by the merry feast of his companions. He was walking up and down the large entry Hall of the Hotel with about the same rapidity as a soldier marching to common time, evidently lost in thought, and occasionally muttering unintelligible nonsense. It is altogether unknown how long this solitary, isolated individual might have continued his melancholy perambulations, had it not been for a circumstance astonishing and gratifying to his feelings. A form as graceful as its tread was light, was observed cautiously descending the stair-way, until, observing the Hall entirely silent and unfrequented by any but the individual who was slowly pacing over it, she appeared to gain courage and advancing with a quicker step was instantly before the astonished stranger.

"Lady Elizabeth!" uttered he in unaffected astonishment.

"It is so," feebly articulated the fair one, whose agitation would hardly allow her to speak. "But be assured, Sir," she continued, "that with none but one in whose honor I could most implicitly rely, would I place such confidence!"

"Unexpected happiness indeed," exclaimed the stranger, in whom before now the young St. Clair must have been detected, as in the lady, Lady Elizabeth D'Arville must have been discovered.

"A moment's liberty," resumed Lady Elizabeth, "while I explain this abrupt introduction. Ten days ago I left my noble father's Mansion for London, to visit my relations, under the protection of Le Chevalier de la Forblesse. Accustomed to rely in the most unrestrained manner upon our relationship, I could not conceive that his wishes or sentiments could be founded on any other feeling—but most lamentably have I been deceived—we were not a day's journey from Paris, when his conversation assumed an unusual tone, and his expressions of admiration became too plain to be misunderstood, and too disagreeable to be endured—what I have to fear, I know not, but from the looseness of his morals, the depravity of his character, and above all the principles, decidedly deistical, which he never hesitates to avow, I am placed in the most unenviable of situations—if, as I fear, he does not intend to approach nearer London, for so he has hinted, the consequences may be fearful; and if he does, his near relationship will entitle him to torment me perpetually, even beyond the power of my connexions in the Metropolis to prevent."

"Under those circumstances there is but one course to pursue," said St. Clair, "which might I advise, is an immediate return to Paris."

"There my wishes," resumed the fair distressed, "undoubtedly pointed, but unprotected, it is impossible—"

"Do not fear on that account," said St. Clair, "although you would justly shudder at the idea of my offering to accompany you, yet there is a way to obviate every difficulty. Let the equipage be instantly but silently prepared, and set out immediately—after your departure is known in the Hotel, I may with propriety follow, at a convenient, though I assure you highly respectful distance, and guard you from every peril, at every rist."

"Your sentiments, Sir, are so honorably expressed that I cannot hesitate to agree—may I beg you to cause every thing to be prepared," modestly and timidly asked the lady.

"With the deepest sense of pleasure," replied he, "in a few minutes you may descend with safety, and all will be in readiness."

Lady Elizabeth immediately ascended the stair-way and was lost to the sight of the gazing, enchanted St. Clair, who stood for a few moments in deep but pleasurable reverie, overcome by the rapturous events of the evening, but soon re-assuming his wonted spirits, he went in search of the servant of Lady Elizabeth to deliver her commands, with feelings and anticipations of the brightest kind; often thanking his fortunate stars for the lucky expedition which the recent decease of a distant relation, and a devise of a valuable estate compelled him to make, to take possession of his newly acquired property.

The immediate preparation of the carriage was, among the servants who dearly loved and respected Lady Elizabeth, and who always obeyed her desires with unequalled alacrity, the work of a few minutes: and in a very short time its heavy wheels with the usual accompaniment of horses hoofs, rattling out of the stable yard into the road, produced a noise which soon set the house in motion—the Landlady was absolutely thunderstruck, and very sagely wondered what her house could have contained to displease the party; and the servants partaking of their mistress's wonderment, indulged in many improbable suppositions. Le Chevalier, to whose ears the sudden departure of the carriage was a death note, foaming with rage, came hastily down stairs, to the additional astonishment of the Landlady, who supposed that he had of course departed with the Lady. His anguish was truly pitiable, although it was evident he strived as much as possible to restrain its outward symptoms. Pursuit was naturally his first determination, although he felt it was useless; yet with the hope of appeasing the fugitive before she reached her father, whose displeasure was ruin, he begged the Landlady to have a horse instantly prepared—this was not so readily granted by one who had already reason to doubt the intentions of her guests, and with the most serious air she expressed her sorrow at the unfortunate circumstance that there was but one horse in the stable, which belonged to a gentleman who had arrived that evening. He next pressed his solicitations on St. Clair, and endeavoured by ingenious and plausible fabrications to induce him to grant a favour, which under other circumstances would have been cheerfully granted. Frustrated in every attempt he retired in apparent, and no doubt real distress, to his chamber, where we will leave him to the most profitable meditation, and the party that accompanied St. Clair to their jovial feast, while we follow Lady Elizabeth, with St. Clair in the rear of her equipage, full speed on their road to the Metropolis of France, and continually fearing an interruption to their progress, which happily did not take place.

Arrived within a few miles of Paris, St. Clair prayed and obtained an interview with Lady Elizabeth, wherein as historical details inform us, after a long but highly interesting interchange of sentiments, and the most fervent declarations of unbounded love on one side, and the most sweet and delicate, though tardy reciprocal avowal on the other, the individuals composing the cabinet of consultation, parted, highly and exquisitely gratified with what had passed.

And when within the wall of her father's stately Mansion, a reference to the memoranda of one of his old friends, after his death, with which we have been obligingly furnished, informs us, that as soon as the indignant feelings naturally engendered against his nephew, on hearing his daughter's account of his ungrateful perfidy were partially subsided, his expressions of thankful admiration towards her gallant protector were copiously expended, and the utmost cordiality pervaded his invitation to St. Clair to become his guest during his stay in Paris: and we are further informed that the meritorious and fervent passion which mutually existed soon divulged itself to the piercing eye of the old Count D'Arville, whose feelings on the subject, partially elicited by the prepossessing and winning manner of St. Clair, and still more by the noble estate which we before averted to his having become possessed of by the decease of a titled relation, ultimately proved to be agreeable to all parties—all the periodicals of the day gave a liberal place to the most diffuse accounts of the nuptials which were in all respects munificently managed, unequalled by any similar celebration, before or since.

GEORGE IV. KING OF ENGLAND.

Was born August 12, 1762, and is the eldest son of the late king and Charlotte of Mecklenburgh Strelitz.

In right of birth he was duke of Cornwall, and also duke of Rothsay and high steward of Scotland. In 5 days after his birth, he was created prince of Wales and earl of Chester. 1771, he was installed knight of the garter.—His tutors were as follows:—Lady Charlotte Finch, until the age of nine years; then came the earl of Holdernesse, lord Bruce, and the duke of Montague. His real instructors, however, were the venerable Markham, afterwards archbishop of York; Dr. Herd, afterwards bishop of Worcester; Mr. Smelt, and several others. If the multitude of instructors could have insured him mental superiority, the subject of this sketch would certainly have been a great man; but it appears, by all accounts, that confinement to study was the last thing in the world to please the prince. He was delighted with the period of his youth which brought with it the opportunity of enjoyment and freedom from restraint.

When he came to his 21st year, he removed to Carlton house, with a trifling income of £50,000 sterling and 50,000 outfit. The whigs wishing to ingratiate themselves with their future sovereign, proposed a larger allowance, but the old king would not consent to it; and for a while the prince was hand and glove with the popular party—their apparent idol, their eternal toast, and their wretched dupe.

The prince's expensive habits having brought him into debt to upwards of two hundred thousand pounds sterling, he sold his stud of running horses, stopped the building of Carlton house, and began to talk of laying up money to pay his debts.

In a year's time the scheme took, all believed him sincere. He was voted 160,000*l.* by parliament, and allowed 10,000 additional by the king.

In 1788, when his father's malady grew worse, the bottle companions of the prince began to urge his claims to the regency of the kingdom, in hopes of making their own fortunes, while Mr. Pitt and the king's ministers interfere, since there they had a decided majority, and could control the event.

Amidst the recriminations of the two parties, the old king recovered, and son and father became reconciled, to the great annoyance of the prince's friends. The French revolution breaking out at the same time, cast such a gloom over the royal family, and most other crowned heads, that the prince withdrew from his old connections in politics, with little ceremony.

The prince's private debts, however, increased as fast as those of the nation; when at length by means of his situation, he was forced into a marriage with the princess Caroline of Brunswick, which took place in 1795.

His wife was escorted to England by some of the prince's choicest female favourites; in which action he displayed a want of delicacy that would have disgraced a savage. Every one knows, that from the moment of their first meeting, difficulties arose in their domestic relations, which will never probably be explained until the death of the principal actors.

In 1810, he was appointed regent of the kingdom, by act of parliament; and as it was a Pitt measure, any other conduct in the prince would have been considered pit fal.

In this new sphere he has made many good treaties for his subjects and received the visits of kings and emperors, in his own capital.

In 1816, he gave his daughter to Leopold of Saxe Coburg, a German prince, who had high pretensions to birth and little pretensions to money.

In 1820, George became king of England, by the demise of his father, and since he has been on the throne, Great Britain has been unusually flourishing. This is his good fortune, and does not result from his qualifications. Immersed in pleasure, immoral in his life, decayed in his health, and incapable of business, the remembrance of the past must embitter his present moments, and give a fearful coloring to the future. His conduct as a son and as a husband, can never be justified; and his traits of character as a "fine gentleman," will not secure him a single panygerist among all his troop of friends.

This is a fair picture of George the 4th; and thanks to heaven, the valor of our forefathers has preserved us from the necessity of acknowledging him as our sovereign lord the king.

THE LADIES' FRIEND.

A WIFE.

Moore, in his life of Sheridan, thus speaks of Sheridan's first wife, Miss Linley, that was—"We have already seen with what pleasant sympathy she followed her husband throughout his various pursuits—identifying herself with the politician as warmly and readily as with the author, and keeping love still attendant on genius through all his transactions.—As the wife of the dramatist and manager, we find her calculating the receipts of the house, assisting in the adaption of her husband's opera, and reading over the plays sent in by dramatic candidates. As the wife of the senator and orator, we see her, with no less zeal, making extracts from state papers, and copying out ponderous pamphlets—entering with all heart and soul into the details of elections, and even endeavoring to fathom the mysteries of the funds. The affectionate and sensible care with which she watched over, not only her own children, but those which her beloved sister, Mrs. Tickell, confided to her in dying, goes the finish to this picture of domestic usefulness. When it is recollected too, that the person thus lovingly employed was gifted with every charm that could adorn and delight society, it would be difficult, perhaps, to find any where a more perfect example of that happy mixture of utility and ornament in which all that is prized by the husband and the lover combines, and which renders woman, what the sacred fire was to the Parsees—not only an object of adoration on their altars, but a source of warmth and comfort to their hearts."

If there is a qualification in which a female ought to excel, it is a thorough and practical acquaintance with the arts and duties of domestic life. She may be ignorant of other branches of human knowledge, and deficient in more refined attainments with comparative impunity, but embellishments cannot supply her deficiency in these. These constitute her peculiar and appropriate employment, and so far from being beneath her regard, they adorn and beautify the most distinguished of her sex.

The sentiment may not exactly accord with the opinions of the present age, but it is one that ought to be inscribed on the heart of every female, that industry and economy are her true glory. There is no apology for a slothful woman. A slothful woman is more fit for a domestic drudge, or the slave of an eastern depot, than for the elevated station which freedom, civilization and christianity have assigned her. A woman who is occupied in little else than receiving the courtesies of the other sex, having every want supplied by obsequious attendants, if she does not become torpid by inaction, is almost always the victim of that morbid sensibility which, while it can weep over the ideal scenes of a novel or tragedy, has no interest in the affecting realities of human life, and passes through the world without communicating happiness, or acquiring respectibility.

Few appreciate the obligations, cares and labors of an industrious female; and few, I fear, are sensible of the perpetual self-denial which she is called to exercise in the performance of her laborious and reiterated duties.—Her eye must be every where in her own proper sphere; her authority every where in her own retired dominion; her hand on every spring in all the departments of domestic labor; and a cheerfulness amid care, constitutes one of the prominent excellencies of her character. A female that has been induced to believe she was made for nothing but to be beloved and admired, and who is never pleased but by the alternations of idleness and dissipation, has never learned to estimate her true worth and excellence and is a stranger to the high destination of woman.

Religion in woman, as in man, is not only "of the operation of God," but the result of reflection, comparison and choice, and consists in a cheerful and happy renunciation of all the heart holds dear, for Jesus Christ, and of every opposing interest for his kingdom and glory. And this is her distinguished excellence. Let the fear of God, and the love of Jesus Christ, control her domestic virtues; let the humility, patience, faith, hope, charity and resignation, of the gospel, become interwoven with her personal accomplishments, and sweeten and govern her conduct—and how lovely is such a woman! It has frequently been remarked, that pious women are not only more numerous, but more pious, than pious men. How infinitely superior are her charms to all the fascinations of beauty, all the splendor of external accomplishment, and all the delicious joys of giddy dissipation! How invaluable does such a woman appear, adorned and dignified, not only by all that earth can give, but decked in the robes of that piety and loveliness which earth can neither give nor take away.

INTERESTING LETTER.

Extract from an Officer of the American Navy, dated U. S. Frigate Brandywine, Gibraltar, Nov 14, 1825.

After considerable delay, owing to the general monotony of our cruize heretofore, I brig on the eve of sailing, to comply with the promise I made you in Washington. Unfortunately our trip across the Atlantic was most boisterous, consequently sea-sickness and frequent attacks of the gout, occasioned by the dampness of the weather, deprived us of many opportunities of conversing with the General, which we would otherwise have enjoyed.—Sufficient were afforded, however, to enhance the opinion of his goodness and affability we previously entertained.—On leaving the ship we presented an address, of which the enclosure to this is a copy; and to which he replied verbally, as follows:—"My dear young friends, I am unable to express my feelings towards you. Before I had the pleasure of your acquaintance, I considered it an honor to belong to the United States' Navy; since then my knowledge of you as individuals has added to my admiration of the chivalry of your profession, and rendered sanguine my expectations of its future achievements. Your country has reason to be proud of you. I part from you with regret, but should your duties or inclinations bring you again to France, remember that La Grange is the home of every American. Farewell."

I have put his reply here because of its brevity. His manner was most affectionate.—The tear in his eye, and the almost convulsive grasp of his hand, were silent, but most expressive tokens of the feelings of the man.

We did not anchor off Havre—but immediately after the departure of the General and suite, Capt. Morris and the passengers left the ship, we made sail, and proceeded for this, our then intended place of destination. You have doubtless heard ere this of our having encountered a gale of wind in the Channel which eventually compelled us to bear away for Cowes. We availed ourselves of the fortnight we lay there wind bound to caulk the outside and fill up the remainder of our water. Cowes is an open roadstead, protected only to the Southward and westward by the Isle of Wight, of which it forms the principal port, and to the Northward by the coast of Hampshire. The town of Cowes situated at the mouth of the nominal River Medina, and on a clay hill side, is contracted in its size, with narrow dirty streets and low irregular buildings.

Southampton on the opposite shore, in the county of Hampshire, and situated on Southampton river, is on the contrary the most beautiful town I ever beheld. It has broad paved streets, running at right angles, and handsome brick and stuccoed buildings, with a town hall in the centre, built a century back, reaching over the principal streets. It has a Cathedral, a College, an institution for Deaf and Dumb, and an Orphan Asylum. It also contains a Military Academy, combining classes of Cadets for the Army and Navy, an extensive Corn Magazine and Poor House, and about 28,000 inhabitants. Portsmouth is an extensive town covering an immense space of ground, and combining in its general term the separate towns of Portsmouth, Portsea and Gosport, containing in all from 60 to 70,000 inhabitants. It is celebrated for its Dock-yards, which we were ungeneously refused permission to visit. I say ungeneously, because we afforded the English officers every facility they could desire, and certainly more than they expected, in making any observations and taking any dimensions they pleased. They were themselves ashamed of it, and alleged, in exculpation, the paltry plea, "that permission could not be granted without the consent of the Admiralty," when the Board were down and sailed round us. We were permitted, however, to visit the shipping, among them the Victory, Lord Nelson's flag ship at the battle off Trafalgar, and were gratified with a view of the spot where he fell, and the apartment in which he expired. The limits of the paper compels me to retrench. On our passage to this place we fell in with the English ship Venus water-logged and abandoned, and that morning taken possession of, for the purpose of towing in by the ship Apollo. We here found the North Carolina, Constitution and Erie, and will sail in a few days for winter quarters at port Mahon (Island of Minorca.) The Ontario is cruising in the Archipelago; we will relieve her in the Spring and contemplate visiting Alexandria and Constantinople.

ADDRESS TO GEN. LA FAYETTE.

The undersigned Midshipmen of this ship, beg leave, with sentiments of the most filial veneration, to approach you, to tender our grateful acknowledgements for the affability of demeanor and the soothing paternal interest you have invariably evinced towards us during our late association—and, as much as regret for your loss will allow us to be sincere, to congratulate you on your safe return to your native land; where, we trust, in the bosom of your family and amid the circle of your friends you will enjoy that tranquility, which the retrospect of a well-spent life, of a life so honorably useful, so variously heroic, and so redeeming to human nature, may be supposed to confer.

Encomium has been variously and happily applied and exhausted; so much so, that any attempt would prove mere repetition, and appear trite and unreasonable. Permit us, however, to say, that a career such as yours, is an ample refutation of the doctrine of modern degeneracy.

He alone of antiquity who could forget his private wrongs in the calamities of his country, and from banishment hasten to the aid of his oppressors, can be compared to him of modern times, who, a foreigner by birth and education, a stranger to the language, manners and propensities of an infant people, struggling in a cause apparently desperate, and for an object by all, save the inspired, deemed visionary; rallied to their standard; lavishing blood and treasure in its defence; pledging life, character and fortune in the result.

Such sacrifices are the demonstrations of heroism. Such principles as actuate them, the peculiar attributes of the disinterested patriot, the citizen of the world, the benefactor of Mankind.

Devoid alike of the inclination and capacity to detain you by a parade of sentiment as unmeaning probably as verbose, we will not, in conclusion, prove so regardless of your comfort as to state that the idea of separation conveys that of unalloyed regret. The immediate prospect of a home and its enjoyments that await you, in no small degree alleviates the sense of deprivation we should otherwise sustain.

Wishing you health, prosperity and that peace which a heart such as yours can appreciate, we bid you a sincere, affectionate and heartfelt adieu—confidently trusting that the Brandywine's trip to France, may not prove the last act in the drama of a Nation's gratitude.

COMMUNICATION.

Having repeatedly lodged at Mr. Wells's, when he kept stagemaker's well known stand on the Lancaster turnpike, and being always treated to my satisfaction, I visited his house now in Philadelphia, the "Western Hotel," Market street, south side, between Eighth and Ninth. Mr. Wells removed to this house in the spring of 1825, when, owing to frequent changes in its immediately preceding tenants, it had lost its custom, which had been, years before, quite large. It appears to be the earnest wish of the whole family, by kind and prompt attention to all who favour them with their custom, and by good order and reasonable charges, to establish the good character of the house. The above is written without the knowledge of Mr. Wells or any of his family, and in which the writer has no interest whatever. It is thought to be a commendation justly due to a worthy man and a pleasing family, and may be useful information to persons whose business calls them to Philadelphia.

A WESTERN MAN.

COMMUNICATION.

Among the many grievances which weigh heavily, and are calculated to dampen the spirits and mar the happiness of old age, there is none more depressing than the bitter reflection of attaining to it without having directed the youthful exertions towards the cultivation and embellishment of the mind. No subject, perhaps, has received the disquisitions of more learned authors than this; yet it is one that should excite the attention of youth more particularly than it does; but it is ever a source of happy reflection, and demands the liveliest admiration of every friend to education, that in our commonwealth the hand of instruction is extended liberally and impartially to all classes. No city perhaps can be placed on a level with Philadelphia with respect to its public schools and the distribution of knowledge.

Among the various ways which the young men of our city have of improving themselves, perhaps none afford a better opportunity for it than the debating and composition societies, of which the Pennsylvania and Platonian Associations have acquired no little celebrity.

JUNIUS.

NEW YORK.

The Legislature of New-York, assembled at Albany on the 3d inst. The Lt. Governor took the chair in the Senate. A letter was received from J. Ward, a member of the Senate, accused of bribery, demanding an official enquiry into the subject, which was laid on the table. In the House, Samuel Young, recently a candidate for Governor was elected Speaker, and Edward Livingston, Clerk.—The Argus says, "The result, we trust, will satisfy such as have entertained doubts as to the republican character of the two houses."

The Message of Gov. Clinton was received the same day, through the hands of C. A. Clinton, his private Secretary. The message is lengthy and is replete with interesting and important information. It commences by a reference to the present peaceful and flourishing state of our country, as calculated to elicit our gratitude to the Almighty dispenser of all good. Education he says is in a flourishing condition. The capital of the school fund is $1,333,000, which will be gradually increasing from the sales of public lands. The number of children taught in the schools the last year is well ascertained to be more than 430,000 The appropriations last year for the school fund was $80,670, which he recommends be augmented to $120,000 annually. The Monitorial system has his recommendation and he proposes the establishment of a seminary for the education of teachers in that system of instruction. The colleges are recommended to the munificence of the legislature, particularly the new college of Geneva, which is in a promising state and has never received the public bounty. The Medical College, in New York City, has not exhibited that increasing prosperity which was expected, on account of intestina divisions. A similar college at Fairfield is in a flourishing state. The resuscitation of the Historical Society of New-York is recommended. In relation to the Canals of New-York, the Governor says:

"On the 20th of October last, the western canal was in a navigable state, and vessels passed from Lake Erie to the Atlantic Ocean. In about eight years artificial communications, near 428 miles in length have been opened to the Hudson river from Lake Champlain by the northern canal—to Lake Ontario by the Oswego river and the western canal, and to lake Erie and the other western lakes by the latter canal—thus affording an extent of inland navigation unparalleled in the experience of mankind. The expence of these works and of some auxiliary, connected and incidental operations amounts to $9,130,375 83 exclusive of interest paid on loans.

The canal debt as follows:

$4,524,270 99 at 5 per cent.
3,213,500 60 at 6 per cent.
$7,737,770 99

The annual interest of which is $419,023 55

The sum of $870,000 of the 6 per cent. stock is reimbursable at the pleasure of the state after the first day of October, and the remainder of the debt after the first day of July 1837 and 1845. The amount of tolls received this year will not fall short of half a million. * * * * It is obvious that the work will in a few years pay for itself, or in other words, that the income will defray the expense of erection. The auction and salt duties, and the proceeds of sales of land, together with the excess of the income of tolls beyond the interest of the debt, will certainly exceed $400,000 this year, which may be applied to the payment of part of the loans."

Extract of a Letter from W. Maclure, Esq. to a gentleman near Philadelphia, dated

Beaver, Dec. 29, 1825.

Dear Sir—We are detained by the ice 36 miles below Pittsburg, and Mr. Owen has left us to go by land to New Harmony. I am much pleased with the comparison of the great mass of labour on this side and yours of the Allegheny. Property is dividing every day more equally, and knowledge is becoming equalized with a rapidity unknown to any other state of civilization. In coming here, we stopped a day at the town of Economy, built by the ancient constructors of Harmony, and were delighted to find the immense advantages of physical union, where the one half of the Biped's are not occupied as in the individual system, in counteracting and marring the work of the other; to find a large town fit for the lodging of 7 or 800, a large tavern for the accommodation of 30 strangers, a palace for papa and his family, a large woollen and cotton manufactory, dye houses, &c. drove by a steam engine, all started into existence in less than a twelve month, by the Union and Harmony of mere physical interest.

"We are here in the midst of a land flowing with milk and honey, fully occupied with the various necessary labours that effectually banish ennui—some of us at first thought the rough boards of a keel boat not so handsome as mahogany sideboards and tables, &c. but finding that neither the table nor the chair adulterated the taste of the venison, turkies or poultry, which we ate off them, logically concluded that neither table nor chair had any thing to do with the nourishment of the food. Messrs. Say, Lesueur, &c. are perfectly well, and enjoying all the faculties of both body and mind."

The state prison in New-York appears to be in an excellent condition; the average number of prisoners in it for the last year was 575, and the support and clothing of each prisoner cost 32 dollars and 72 cents. There is now a balance in favour of this prison of 5,823 dollars 33 cents, to meet the expense of this year. The new state prison erecting at Singsing, in West Chester was commenced in May last, and will probably be finished in the autumn of 1827. The materials for the building, except iron, are found on the spot. No wood is used in the construction, and it will be entirely incombustible. The ground, about 130 acres, has cost about 20,000 dollars. A great part of the work is done by convicts, who are secured in the night time in 60 cells already provided. The principal material is excellent marble.

ENGLISH NEWS.

From London papers received at New-York.

Cowes, Nov. 21.

The steam-packet Lee, Capt. Colville, sailed from Liverpool on Wednesday, and the following morning came in contact with a brig laden with corn, the master and crew of the brig leaped on board the steam vessel, a man and his wife, passengers, went down with the brig, which almost instantly sunk. Captain Colville hoisted out his boat, but too late to save them.

The tempest of the 9th and 10th was dreadful on the coast about Rochfort and several vessels were more or less damaged. The effect of the storm extended to the Pyrenees. The wind blew with a degree of violence of which there has been no instance since 1820. The snow which covered the Pyrenees was almost entirely melted during the night. It was feared at Pau that great damage had been done in the mountains.

During the dreadful gale of Thursday, the 10th instant, Le Curieux, Capt. Videll, was entirely lost, off Beneville, and every soul perished. She had about 22 persons on board, 15 of whom were passengers, and amongst these was an English family of the name of Pousset, residents of Jersey, who had been a few months in France.

The celebrated aeronaut, Mr. Graham, with his wife, has made a most perilous ascension in a balloon from Plymouth. The balloon was driven ten miles out to sea, and when they descended to the water, no boat was nearer than three miles. However, they clung to the car until assistance arrived, when they were taken off—Mrs. G. quite exhausted.

Under the Madrid head of the 17th November, it is stated that letters from Corunna mention the discovery of a conspiracy in that town, in consequence of which many persons have been arrested. Letters from Gibraltar form the pretext upon which these arrests are grounded. A change in the administration is again rumoured. The Duke de Infantado, however, it is supposed, will retain M. Calomarde. Gen. Amerio has made a discovery at Cadiz, which seems to support what has been said in the London journals relative to the project of effecting a disembarkation, headed by Mina. The Minister of War has, in consequence, given orders for precautionary measures to be adopted along the whole line of coast.

Madame Joseph Bonaparte has arrived at Rome with her daughter, who is to be married to the son of Louis Bonaparte.

The German papers state that the southern part of the Morea, particularly Coron, Modon, and Navarino continue a prey to the ravages of the plague. The Egyptian soldiers, as well as the inhabitants, are dying by hundreds.

Deaths in Paris from January 1, to October 1, by small pox, were 1,264.

In Prussia a large number of young men have cut off their thumb in order to claim exemption from military duty.

Washington Irving's works, in 16 volumes, were published in Paris on the 28th of November, by A. & W. Galignani.

The Emperor of Russia has allowed all merchants, who have received orders of Knighthood, either for public services or patriotic sacrifices, to enter into the class of Russian nobility, even if they continue their former professions.

A letter from Alexandria of the 10th of October, says that an expedition sailed on that day for Greece, consisting of 14 frigates, 10 corvettes, 42 brigs, 10 fire-ships, 20 armed Turkish transports, and 28 European transports, including the London engineer steam packet. Eight thousand disciplined infantry, and about 1000 Turkish cavalry were embarked on board the vessels.

A society established in Paris for the purpose of building steam boats of iron, on the 5th of November launched one upon the Seine, which was 120 feet long, carries 12,500 kilogrammes, or about 125 tons, and draws but fourteen inches of water. It weighs a third less than a vessel of the same tonnage made of wood. Several other similar boats are building at the same establishment, and they are expected to be of great benefit to the trade of Paris, by expediting the transport of goods.

A society has been established at Paris, for supplying the city with ice. They have established at St. Ouen a vast ice house, where provision is made for the congelation of water, even in winters when the cold is too moderate for ice to form in sufficient quantities on the rivers. They propose to deliver the ice at the houses of subscribers, at a sou, about a cent, a pound.

Mr. Rufus King, and Mr. Hurtado, the Columbian minister, were presented to the King of England, on the 14th of November.

The London brewers have raised the price of their porter five shillings a barrel, which will put into the pockets of thirteen of the most eminent houses, the sum of 400,000 pounds a year. Lord Grosvernor's income at present exceeds 250,000 pounds a year.

The town of Brioude, the birth place of La Fayette, has celebrated his return to France by a grand entertainment, at which a song of the popular poet de Beranger, entitled La Fayette in America, was sung, and several popular toasts were drank, among which Washington and Bolivar were not forgotten.

Letters from Canton, dated the 22d of May, were received in London, which mention that the company's treasury was full, and 100,000 chests of tea ready to be shipped, so that the first ships would soon be despatched.

A man in Sicily has invented a machine for propelling ships by hand. Three persons, one of whom works an hour and rests himself two hours, are sufficient to move a vessel of 20 tons (40,000 lbs.) and so in proportion for larger vessels. The expense of the machine is from 600 to 1,000 ducats.

In England, the Hydrophobia is said to have been cured by Galvanism.

In the late war of the Peninsula, the peasantry, who lived on the "line of march" were much harrassed by the troops, who, at their arrival at a village, immediately put their poultry in requisition. At length, as soon as the drum was heard, the brood hens and reverend ganders were locked up in chests and closets, where, being in the dark, they kept silent, and the inquirers were informed that the last party had eaten the whole. This device succeeded for a time; but one day an old campaigner of the German legion, carried a live duck from his panniers into a farm-house, and pinched him till he extorted the usual "quack, quack!" The result was a simultaneous reply from all the boxes and cupboards in the room; and, to the utter despair of the Spanish farmers, in three weeks the teat was general through the army.

The bill to lay off the State into Districts, for the election of Representatives to Congress, did, contrary to information previously received, receive the signature of the Governor, and became a law. So that the Election of Members of the Twentieth Congress will be made, in this State, by Districts.

On Tuesday evening, about six o'clock, two boys broke the window of Mr. Dickinson's watchmaker's shop, in Third street, opposite Girard's Bank, and grasped two glasses patent diamonds, valued at twenty dollars, and two or three watch ribbons, with which they made their escape. The thieves half an hour afterwards cut a pane of glass out of Mr. Moss's window, opposite Girard's bank, and stole a dozen silver pencil cases, a card of sportsman's knives, and a card of assorted penknives. About seven o'clock a window of Mr. Jones, on Fourth street above Market, was broken, and dry goods to the value of about forty dollars stolen.

In the house of delegates of Virginia, on the 31st ult. the committee on Roads and Internal Navigation were instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the act incorporating the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. By a report on the subject of the Penitentiary, that, by the manufacturing operations of that institution, for the year ending on the 30th of September, a balance appears in favour of the institution of $10,505 31¢. A committee was appointed, on Monday, to examine the James River Canal, and report the condition of the same; as well as their opinion on the propriety or impropriety of further continuing the said Canal the present year, after existing contracts shall have been complied with.

A diabolical attempt has been made to assassinate the Rev. Mr. Clarke, of Geneva, N. Y. Mr. C. was called up on the night of the 17th ult. between 12 and 1 o'clock, when, on opening the door, two pistols were fired at him by some ruffians who stood upon the steps. Fortunately, the shots did not take effect upon the body of Mr. C. but lodged in the door. Some college students are supposed to have been the perpetrators of this outrage.

Neither the resolutions on the subject of alleged invasions of state rights by the general government, nor those of an opposite character, were called up or acted upon during the late session of the Georgia legislature. A report was made by the committee, and adopted, in support of the grounds taken by the Governor in defence of the late treaty, and entering the solemn protest of the legislature against its annulment.

During the homeward voyage of the brig Forest, Captain Neal, lately arrived at this port from Buenos Ayres, while off the Brazil Banks, a curious accident happened. On the night of the 6th of October, about 10 o'clock, a light breeze playing, the brig sailed amongst 60 or 70 spermaceti whales—the largest and most powerful of this species of animals. The gambolling, curveting, blowing and lashing of these creatures of the deep caused no small uneasiness to those on board, insomuch that all hands were ordered to the pumps. Fortunately no material injury was occasioned.—One huge fellow, came plump against the channels with such force as to leave 8 or 10 inches of his hide sticking on one of the bolts. Another gave such a blow to the broadside of the vessel, near the stern, that the helmsman was in imminent danger of annihilation. Had the vessel been going with velocity, the consequence would have been serious.

Indian Schools.—The government pays 10,500 dollars annually for the support of schools, &c. at 38 stations among various tribes of Indians. Of the schools 16 were established by the American Board of Foreign Missions, 7 by the Baptists, 6 by the United Foreign Missionary Society, 2 by the Moravians, &c. The society of Jesuits have a catholic school among the Indians of Missouri, which receives 800 dollars annually. The number of teachers (including their families) at all the schools is 281; number of scholars 1159.

A project is on foot to improve the navigation of the Mohawk river, so that steam boats may pass from Schenectady to Utica, N. Y. with their usual rapidity and without obstruction, except by a few locks, of three or four feet lift, at different places, on account of dams to be made to produce a still-water navigation, when the river is low, and so constructed that the ice and water may pass over them when the river is full. A rail road from Schenectady to Albany is also spoken of. It is said that the canal cannot accommodate the great trade that is springing up, and that additional means of transportation, to and from the west, must be adopted! It is not to be doubted, that this trade will mightily increase, and it will be unwise in the New-Yorkers not to open every possible avenue to keep it a-going. A canal around the falls of Niagara, as heretofore mentioned, is another of the projects for this purpose that has been urged, and something of the sort will certainly be necessary, when the waters of the Susquehannah shall be joined to the Erie canal, as it is probable they will be, and at an early day.

Illinois.—The descriptions given by French writers of the Illinois country, when it was first visited by French settlers, were of the most captivating kind. Its beautiful scenery, fertile prairies, its supposed mineral wealth, were painted in glowing colours, and a new paradise seemed to open for Frenchmen on the banks of the Illinois. A monastery of Jesuits was established at Kaskaskia, which is said to have had at one time upwards of 400 converts. The French of the settlements on the Illinois, like those of Indiana, soon degenerated, and by degrees assimilated their manners to those of the Indians, among whom they resided. The Illinois river runs a south-west course of nearly 400 miles, and joins the Mississippi about 18 miles above the mouth of the Missouri. It has a gentle current, unbroken by rapids, and is navigable for boats throughout its whole course.

The Editor of the Baltimore American states that the character, standing and talents of Dr. Kent, the new Governor of Maryland, are of the first order; and that under his direction and control, the affairs of the State will be administered with ability, wisdom and energy. The election of Dr. Kent has caused a vacancy in Congress as to the district which he has ably represented for many years.—William Wootton, Esq. is talked of as his successor.

In the case of Mackie, Milne & Co. against William Cairns and others, decided on the 30th ult. in the Court of Errors of the State of New-York, it has been established, as the law of that state, that an assignment made by an insolvent debtor, in trust for the benefit of creditors, if it reserves for his own use any portion of the property conveyed, is void as to judgment creditors not assenting to it; and that it is void not merely with regard to the portion reserved, but wholly and entirely.—This decision overturns former practice, which of course also was, until this decision, the general impression as to what was law in such a case.

Sleep Walking.—A melancholy result from this unfortunate habit occurred on the 3d inst. at Norfolk, Va. A young lad named Seymour, serving on board the U. S. ship John Adams, as a lobbily boy, walked in his sleep out of the third story of Mr. Stavro's boarding-house, and upon coming in contact with the pavement, shattered the lower maxillary bone in a dreadful manner, dislocated and fractured his left wrist, and also made a compound fracture of his left thigh. Medical aid was immediately procured, and he is doing as well as could be expected. It is a remarkable circumstance attending this case, that the faculties of his mind appear in no degree affected by the severe concussions necessarily given to the brain in the fall—his conversation being perfectly rational, and his memory unimpaired.

About three and a half millions of dollars have been expended upon 11 or 12 forts now under construction, and it is estimated that two and a half millions more will be requisite to complete them. Fort Monroe, at Old Point Comfort has cost upwards of a million of dollars, and one quarter of a million more will be necessary to finish it. The Board of Engineers have projected other fortifications, "to be commenced as soon as possible," which are estimated to cost about four and a half millions of dollars.—They have also projected other works, "to be commenced at a later period," the cost of which is estimated at more than five millions of dollars.

The legislature of South Carolina have appropriated the sum of 12,000 dollars for the support of the transient poor of Charleston.—They have also incorporated a company to introduce the cultivation of the vine and silk into South Carolina, and have incorporated a company, to be called the Charleston Water company, with the exclusive privilege of introducing water into the city of Charleston, by aqueducts.

The New Brunswick Times informs us that a company of enterprising gentlemen have recently purchased several acres of land in the most beautiful part of that city, and intend to lay the same out in building lots, and sell them at reduced prices to purchasers, for the purpose of immediately erecting respectable dwelling houses thereon. Property there is rising, and the place begins to assume an air of new life, in consequence of the benefits expected to result from a resuscitated and well conducted College, and the anticipated advantages of the Delaware and Raritan Canal.

Several persons at Pawtucket, Mass. on Christmas eve, assembled in a room, where a fire of charcoal was kindled in an iron stove, without any funnel. They were all in a short time seized with violent spasms, and sickness of the stomach, and were incapable of escaping from the room. Their situation was fortunately discovered, and they were relieved, and in a short time all recovered.

A number of gentlemen from New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, New Orleans, and many citizens of Kentucky, had arrived at Louisville on the 22d ult. which was the day fixed for receiving proposals for a contract for cutting the Louisville and Portland canal. It was expected that the deliberations of the Commissioners on the various offers, would occupy them for two or three days.

Green Room Intelligence.

Signor Cardon, who was for a considerable time the principal singer at the Opera House in Florence, has arrived in this city, and contemplates giving a concert.

Those two great and distinguished stars of the Drama, Cooper and Conway, are engaged to appear together at the Park theatre, N. Y. They commence in a few nights, and there is no doubt but that the public and the performers will both profit by this arrangement. Quere!—would not the engagement of these two performers for twelve nights, in the place of Kean, satisfy the public, subserve the interest of the theatre, and prevent the responsibility that will attach itself to the Managers should "the proud representative of Shakespear's Heroes" be brought forward at this time?

The engagements of Mr. Kean, we understand, say the New York Advocate, are such as to prevent his visit to Philadelphia at this period. [Fudge!—Does Mr. N. expect to gull us in this way.] Cooper and Conway play next week, after which Kean concludes a short engagement, prior to a visit to Charleston, with part of the present company.

Mr. Kean in his flight from Boston, passed through Hampden, N. H. The paper printed in that town, says:—"We lately saw, in a Journal of visitors names, kept at Ware Factory Village, the following entry:

Dec. 20.—Edmundus Kean—Integer vitæ—scelerisque purus."

The plain English of which is, "a whole skin and a good conscience!"

Mr. Hamblen has been engaged for seven nights at the Boston theatre, where he made his first appearance on Wednesday night, in the character of Hamlet. Mrs. and Miss Pelby are attached to the Boston company. Mrs. Greene from the London theatres, is announced to make her appearance in a short time.

Miss Kelly made her last appearance on Monday night at Boston, in the character of Lady Bell, in Arthur Murphey's comedy, entitled "Know your own Mind."

The Circus in Baltimore is advertised to close in about one week. The benefit nights are nearly completed—where the company will go next we are not informed—probably to Washington city.

A new comedy called "Paul Pry," was played for the first time at the Park Theatre, New York, on Wednesday evening. This piece was written for Liston, and has had an astonishing run at the Haymarket Theatre, London. The opera of Tancredi, by the Italian Troupe, is still performing with great success. It was played for the fourth time on Tuesday evening, and the critics speak in the most lavish terms of praise of the piece and of some of the performers.

The following notice of the theatre at Utica, N. Y. is copied from the last Albany Patriot:—"The very neat little Theatre recently erected by Mr. Gay, of the "Mansion House" was opened on Monday evening, under the management of Mr. H. A. Williams. We cordially wish all parties concerned in that institution a liberal reward for their labors; and all such as choose to think long enough for themselves, to visit it abundance of harmless enjoyment; maugre the scowl of bigotry, and the frown of intolerance."

Mr. Laulow with his theatrical corps has arrived at Mobile, Alab. Several of them are meritorious actors and in high standing among the profession.

A Huntsville (Alab.) paper contains the following flattering notice of Mr. Caldwell, the manager of the New-Orleans theatre:—"This gentleman has arrived on our boards in the characters of Hamlet, Duke Aranza in the Honey Moon, Damon, William Tell, Leon, &c. and has created a sensation rarely experienced by the lovers of the drama in any community. We feel sorry that it is not in our power to enter minutely into his merits, and do them ample justice by a critical analysis of his many new and surprising beauties; but we will sum up the whole by saying—for we think it but due to extraordinary talents to publish it, for the information of those who may not have seen it—that Mr. Caldwell possesses the power of pleasing in an extraordinary degree. His general knowledge of the drama, his versatility, aided by the natural advantages of a fine figure, expressive face, and melodious voice, render him the most pleasing actor we have ever witnessed. We regret for his sake as well as our own, that his talents have had so poor an opportunity of displaying themselves, the wretched barn in which they have been exhibited is completely calculated to depress all energies of talent, and to destroy all scenic illusion. But in compliment to the subject of these remarks, an audience could not have been collected in so miserable an apology for a Theatre; and yet Mr. C. has drawn together, in the most unpropitious weather for public amusement, our most respectable citizens, who unite with us in the opinion, that he is one of the best actors they have ever seen.—His Ode on the Passions we consider entitled to the greatest eulogy."

Miss Foote, says the Dumfries Courier, has played for five nights at that town to crowded houses, and small as the Dumfries theatre is, her shares of the profits (the half of every night's proceeds) amounted to upwards of 100l. In Glasgow she pocketed six times the sum; in Edinburgh she was also pretty successful, and altogether she appears to be in a fair way of making a fortune.

A new tragedy, with the title of Leonidas, has been played with great success at the Theatre Francais, in Paris. M. Pichat is the author of it.

Evening Post.

PHILADELPHIA.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1826.

TO READERS AND CORRESPONDENTS.

As introductory to the original tale on our first page, we should have said it was selected as the best presented for the "CASKET," and as such received the first premium.

"Sancte"—"Genein"—"Mildred Bard"—"Edwin, to Ephraim Doubtful, Esq."—"Night"—"E. C."—"Oxford Bard"—"Serenade"—"To Scribers"—"L."—"I will not weep"—"The Parting"—"A. E. K."—"Conundrums"—"Enigmas," &c. are received this week.

The "Dream of Heaven" abounds in rich, sparkling and beautiful imagery—we wish it had been handed in at an earlier period: it shall appear next week. Several articles of merit which have not been noticed, shall appear as we can find room.

Noticing the circumstance of potatoes having been imported into this city from Liverpool, and sold at $1 per bushel, Mr. Niles of the Register, rather inconsistently enquires, where are our farmers? Our farmers are at their post, but we presume they are not endowed with the faculty of second-sight, or exactly competent to the task of drawing down supplies of rain at pleasure. Mr. N. should rather have asked, where was the rain?

The Legislature of Maryland has at length repealed the prohibitions which have heretofore existed against a valuable class of her citizens, the Jews; who are now, as they long since should have been, admitted to a participation of those rights and privileges of citizenship, which a weak policy or discreditable prejudice, has so unjustly withheld from them.

This measure must prove gratifying to all who are capable of rightly estimating the true principles of republican government. How unreasonable are those who would enforce bonds and penalties to regulate the operations of the mind; how contemptible and wicked in so frail and impotent a creature as man, to attempt to force or control the thoughts and opinions of another, to impose shackles upon those nobler and ethereal faculties which distinguish the human from the brute creation, and with which an omnipotent power hath endowed him; but thanks to that power, the iron reign of superstition has been shaken in its strong holds; the clouds of bigotry and prejudice are fast disappearing from the face of the earth, and the sun of political and religious freedom is dispensing abroad its bright rays, to enlighten and instruct; may it never again be darkened, but continue henceforth to "grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day."

THE NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

This paper has of late been considerably enlarged, and is now said to be the largest newspaper in the world. As regards the talent and skill displayed in its columns, and the minute attention which it at all times bestows upon the transactions at the seat government, much might with justice and impartiality be said; in fact it would be difficult if not impracticable, to suggest any alteration in its management which should be for the better. We have often designed to speak of this publication and recommend it to the favorable attention of our readers, as a fair, comprehensive and invaluable chronicle of the times, both at home and abroad; where state papers and other documents of a public nature, are with the daily debates and proceedings in Congress recorded at large, in a manner, which has won for this journal a standing interior to none in the Union, and justly entitles it to a liberal and extensive patronage.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The following are the remainder of the communications, a notice of which was commenced last week:

"The sea is before thee," &c. we were inclined to insert, but a perusal of the last stanza is not productive of the most favourable impressions, particularly the common place line, "And my eyes are now gazing to think on my love."

"The muffled drum," &c. evinces considerable feeling, but it is injured by the introduction of phrases that partake too much of the ironically pathetic. "Frantic stare," "look'd aghast," and expressions of the kind, are seldom introduced with propriety or effect, particularly in a composition which depicts the sorrows of age, a period when the feelings are settled down to the calm, cold, and almost passionless state which attends the evening of life.

Lines "to my flute" have several objectionable passages: take for example the following verse:

Oh, no, when thy sweet notes are thrilling
The lovely vale along,
I then to thee captive willing,
I'm then the child of song.

The writer may be the child of music, but it is certainly questionable whether he be the "child of song," at least if this is a specimen of his poetical talent.

"Conscience" is by no means void of offence; the "murderer" disturbed in "Morpheus's arms," by the "poisoned arrow of conscience" beats every thing of the kind we have ever read, heard, or dreamed of. Richard the III.'s tent scene is tame and insipid, mere milk and water passion, when compared with this, when he wildly starts

From his thorny bed,
And then he cries
See, see! she dies—
Oh, oh! she's dead!

Well might he finish the terrible oh, oh, oh's with "distraction" and "fury," for it well nigh made our "hair to stand on end like quills upon the fretful porcupine," to peruse this horrible tale; and instead of crying "conscience avaunt," as we well might have done, we happily remembered the admirable exclamation of Hamlet, or the crooked back'd tyrant, (we forget which,) and mentally exclaimed, "Angels and ministers of grace defend us" from bombast such as this.

Next follow some "lines on love," sent to a young lady in the way of admonition or warning:

His bow once in a strung, its shot, oh, how true,
Is not to be warded, dear maiden, by you;
But then let it come, when virtue's the shield,
Your heart it may enter and a pang you may feel.

Is certainly not unworthy the muse; the rest is in keeping with this specimen; but as the writer informs us that the piece, (he calls it a "poem") was "written by the author to a young lady," it is unnecessary to transcribe more here, as it is presumed the lady has herself a copy by this time.

"An Acrostic" on —— is the very best of the kind, but this species of composition is generally dull and uninteresting. Our modest author says, as he has at present little to do at "his calling," he has "turned his hand" to poetry. We would advise him, of all things, to turn it back again, as he will inevitably find his new calling more "stale, flat and unprofitable" than the last, whatever that last might have been.

The next which calls our attention is the prose story of "Montgomery and Caroline," two unfortunate lovers. This is an unfortunate thing altogether, at least we so surmise from a perusal of a very few lines. Who the unfortunate heroine was, we have not read far enough, as yet, to discover; but the unfortunate gentleman who acts as hero of the piece is introduced as the son of "a merchant who had retired from business with a fortune fit for the necessaries of life." We rather unfortunately stumbled on this passage in the very threshold, "retired from business!" with a "fortune fit for the necessaries of life"—why what a good natured, contented soul he must have been; and for fear that we might possibly disturb the "even tenor of his life," we forbear further to intrude upon his leisure or his ample fortune, but leave him to enjoy the quiet bliss which reigns in shades of oblivion.

Lines to Miss —— of ——, are still too imperfect for admission—the writer is mistaken in supposing our objections alluded to "penmanship." The manuscript is fair enough, but here our praise ends; there is neither measure, harmony, rhyme or reason, from beginning to end.

The lines on "Columbia and Liberty" are laid aside as being utterly incomprehensible; the writer brings forward a chain which "leads from earth to heaven," "through space's unbeaten road," one end of which is "secured by Columbia," "the other in heaven," whether as the means of "ascending and descending," or, like a "chain cable," to keep safely moored this mundane sphere, that this goodly frame, the earth, may ride out the storm which Capt. Symmes may create in his subterraneous investigations, or the comet occasion, should it peradventure visit our planet, we cannot possibly divine.

"Edmund on Music," we are inclined to think, is not original.

A correspondent, who is "an ardent admirer of poetry, but not a poet," sends some lines by way of censure on such heathenisms as have sometimes been [illegible] "grave flattery," &c. He has some fair hits, and the subject he has chosen is a legitimate one for the exercise of his satirical humour; but, for the present, we let the subject rest, in hopes that a reformation may take place without the use of such harsh correctives.

Our task is yet unfinished, and we must briefly note down the pieces as they present themselves, without entering into details, which may not be interesting.

"A Dream," beginning "Dark was the place," &c. has afforded some amusement, though the characters are by no means correctly drawn. "Ellen's down-cast eyes and looks so meek," and "Rosa's sprightly tread," are not exactly true to nature—they would probably suit better reversed: however with them we have nothing to do, and dreams we know are not always under the guidance of truth and reason.

"I was wandering about in yonder town," is a very pitiful thing.

"Collectanea, No. 1," is a miserable specimen as relates both to taste and feeling. Did the writer imagine we would disgrace the S. E. Post, by inserting such coarse and indecent trash as is found in some of his selections? If so, he has mistaken its character.

Song, "Let princes roll on," &c. "She was a maiden chaste and fair," &c. "On the death of the Rev. ——," "I've seen the ocean," &c. "Behaviour," are remarkable for—nothing, and will not be likely to add to the amusement of our readers, or to the fame of their respective authors. This is also the predicament in which "Lines to the memory of a friend" are placed; "O think not this short panygeric of mine" is a bad line, as is also "My muse is too feeble to heighten each line," &c. With saying this much, we take our leave, and commend ye, gentlemen, one and all, to the good graces of the "Nine."

FOR SALE,

VALUABLE LANDED PROPERTY,

TOGETHER with a very extensive STOCK, among it a very superior flock of about 200 head of full-blooded Merino Sheep,—situated in Deerfield township, Cumberland county, West New Jersey, on the Stage Road from Philadelphia to Bridgeton, about seven miles from the latter place, being a port of entry on the Cohansey Creek.

No. 1. A Tavern stand which is kept the post-office, and 10 acres of land. The house is convenient, and provided with the necessary out-buildings, as barn, stabling, shed, &c.

No. 2. A Farm, containing about 170 acres of Land, 30 of which are heavy timbered with chesnut, hickory and white oak. The farm rents two good houses, one not very new, a good barn and a blacksmith shop, on the main road—an excellent stand.

No. 4. A Farm, situated about a mile from the above property, containing about 100 acres, 60 of which very heavy timbered land, and about 6 acres natural meadow—the whole in good fence. A creek nearly surrounds this property, and adjoining to it is a grist mill. The farm is provided with a comfortable house, barn, and out-buildings.

No. 5. A lot of 32 acres, lately cleared and now in timothy and clover—the lot is in good fence.

No. 6. A tract of Wood Land, containing about 10 acres, principally white oak, and 2 acres of cedar swamp.

No. 7. A lot of Bush Land, about 20 acres, distant four miles from Bridgeton.

Together, with the above premises will be sold about 200 head, raised from an imported Spanish buck, all young and thrifty sheep, and in the best condition—12 head of cattle, 2 horses, hogs, poultry, &c.—together with all the stock of hay, grain and fodder—also all the farming utensils, consisting of waggon, cart, ploughs, land &c.—in short, every thing necessary to carry on farming on an extensive plan.

The water on the premises is abundant and excellent, and the property has been highly improved for these last twelve years and at least ten thousand dollars have been laid out on it for that purpose. The situation is very handsome and remarkably healthy, the soil good, very retentive of manure, and easily cultivated the markets are near, and the produce brings as high a price as either in Philadelphia or New York. The stages from Philadelphia to Cape May pass the different houses daily—the places of public worship and school houses are adjoining the property.

The above property will be sold low, on liberal terms, and part may remain on the property, secured by bond and mortgage, at a low interest. The titles of the property are undoubted, and possession may be given when desired.

Variety's the very spice of life,
That gives it all its flavour.

The following lines are selected from a short poem written by an intelligent and accomplished Lady of New-York, on the first Excursion of the Steam Boat Washington, Captain Bunker, a new boat remarkable for speed and elegance.

O'er the bright waters haste we; and our speed
The wind's capricious aid disdains to need;
Our galley's haughty prow the wave dwindles,
And mocks each hidden current's swelling tides;
As with instinctive life, or like the fast,
While idly travels in her wake the blast.
Like sea-born Leviathan upon holiday
From ocean's caves along its breast to play,
That strong in giant hulk, defying fear,
Sunders the rolling surf in his career;
So moves she, docile to the secret helm,
And walks with rushing step the liquid realm.

We pass blue hills and shores, and mark the spires
Slow sinking, where the city dim retires—
That isle-enthroned city of our pride,
Is with whose feet the circling waters wide
Meet and pay homage! * * * * *

Well may we love these glorious waves, and range
Proudly in fancy o'er the wondrous change
Since first they yielded to the keel, and flew
O'er their light foam the frail and first canoe,
Whose slumberous upon its cautious way,
Seemed like a sea-nymph darting through the spray,
Till now a thousand sails along them sweep,
And this broad pile, that bulwarked on the deep,
Glides on her ruhaian way flinging idle,
By shores where all the social triumphs smile;
Herself a marvel as she wheels plies,
By Fulton's mighty spell, an ocean-car.—
Well may we number, with admiring thought,
The slow advances time and science wrought,
Since enterprize, each danger prompt to brave,
With her first feeble means essayed the wave—
Since the small skiff, while toiled the labouring oar,
Crept o'er the wave, and hugged the safer shore;
Till as the weary boatman marked the light
And waving pinion speed the sea-gull's flight,
And felt his arm grow powerless as he plied,
While adverse beat the North wind's nicy tide;
Fired with new hopes he shaped the spreading sail,
And winged his bark to drift before the gale:
Thus, with alternate progress and delay,
Ages on ages saw his timid way
Tread scarce more firm, than while the world was young,
Till when, at Fulton's call, invention sprung
Instant to being, in full strength, and swayed
Her ready vassal, steam's transcendant aid!

COMMUNICATION.

Messrs. Editors—Let me call your attention to a species of simpletons who infest our streets, whose highest accomplishments seem to consist in tieing the cambric around their throats, producing their frills, and giving their ruffles room, displaying their fine hang-up coats, twisting the string that dangles from their canes, or planting their hats triumphant on their eyes, to guard the scented outside of their brain, and twirling the rattling cluster of their seals, those dear supplies for emptiness of scull, to smoothe their fingers, and preserve their nails; to bow, to smile, to chatter and decide on every subject, whether right or wrong. Now, let me breathe, for I feel some remorse in so treating the silly creatures; their minds contain as little or not as much as those of children of eight years of age, and it seems to be unnecessary that they should be thus cut up.

CYPRIAN.

Answers to the Conundrums in our last.

1. My wife's father's child; that is my wife herself.
2. Civil.
3. Reviver.
4. Perpetual motion—also, wealth.
5. Because it turns hips into shops.

CONUNDRUMS.

1. Why is a certain plant used in dyeing, worse than a madman?

2. Why is an ardent lover's passion like a gas-light?

"You eat me, you drink me, deny it who can,
I'm sometimes a woman, and sometimes a man.

4. Why is every civil magistrate,
Like water in a freezing state?

If to behead me be your pleasure,
A female common name is found;
Once more beheaded, I'm a measure.

DR. FRANKLIN.

"Friend Franklin," said Myers Fisher, the celebrated Quaker lawyer of Philadelphia, one day to the Dr. "thee knows almost every thing: can thee tell me how I am to preserve my small beer in the back yard? My neighbours are often tapping it of nights."

"Put a barrel of old Madeira by the side of it," replied the Doctor—"let them but get a taste of the Madeira, and I'll engage they will never trouble the small beer any more."

This same great Philosopher used to say "that if parents would but give their sons an early taste for the Madeira of Learning, they would hardly ever take to the detestable small beer of vice."

HORSES.—When your Horses discharge water piss fully from the mouth (which some suppose to be in consequence of their feeding on the latter growth of grass) it is proposed to give two spoonsful of fine salt, and half a spoonful of fine powdered rosin daily, for 3 or 4 days; then desist for a day or two, and repeat it at intervals, for some time. An observing friend, who is willing to do good and to communicate it, remarks, "the benefit experienced, from using the above method, has been sufficient to authorise its recommendation to further trial."

Dr. Jones' Celebrated
UNIVERSAL SYRUP.

THIS Medicine is composed of ten ingredients, every one of which are innocent and healing to the human system, and have been administered to the smallest children with a good effect. This medicine is recommended to the public, and can be administered to all diseases with safety. It is remarkable for curing Intermitting, Coughs, and Bilious, and takes but a few doses to remove the Intermittent from the stomach, and is healing and restoring to the system. This Medicine is likewise recommended for its virtue in curing the Rheumatism, Scrophula, Piles, Gout, Ruptures, Kings Evil, Consumption, &c. in all which diseases it has been administered with great success by the subscriber, and when properly applied has never been known to fail of having the desired effect, which it does not require a long trial, for a few doses will render satisfaction to the patient. Certain cure for the Ague and fever, from three to six days in the longest time required to effect a cure; it matters not how long the patient has been afflicted. For further particulars apply at the S. W. corner of Third and Shippen streets, or at No. 433 Market street, Philadelphia, where I have an Office, private room, and conveniences to accommodate all persons, wherein orders will be attended to.

☞ IMPORTANT!

IN the event of the loss of that desirable and highly ornamental covering, the HAIR, through sickness or other causes, to be enabled to renew and preserve its growth, must be a desirable consideration to those concerned. Such is the established efficacy of

Elliott's Hair Restorative

Upon the capillary system. A very few applications of it, where baldness prevails, will be productive of a covering of young hair, resembling the fine capillaments perceivable in the centre of a flower growing up within a plant. It eradicates from the membrane, the Scurf or Dandruff, which so frequently accumulates around the roots and ultimately destroys the hair; and by its sedative influence upon the capillary vessels, in all cases of retarded growth, the hair will become healthy and thick, and acquire additional lustre. It may be safely, and with good effect, applied to the heads of infants or children, whose hair appear deficient.

HEAD-ACHE.

Its emollient, cooling, gently stimulating, and delicately aromatic properties, renders Elliott's Hair Restorative a superior Capillary Vegetable Lotion. Its effects, as experienced by many subject to nervous headache, or occasional pains in the head, feverish heat, &c. (which in many instances cause the hair to fall off) warrants its recommendation, in such cases, as a most happy cephalic.

 Sold by EMANUEL KRAIL, 92, N. W. corner of Walnut and Second street, nearly adjoining the Merchants' Coffee House; J. W. NEWHOUSE, 140, North Third street; and CHARLES CONDE, 114, North Fifth, three doors above Race street, Philadelphia, at 50 cents per Bottle. tfn

AMERICAN
FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY
No. 161, on the North side of Chesnut street, between Third and Fourth streets, Philadelphia.

THIS long established company having reduced their premiums to a mere trifle, offers to make insurance against Loss or Damage by FIRE on Houses, Barns, Factories, Mills, Machinery, Merchandize, Furniture, and in fine, on property of every description, in Town or Country, on the most unexceptionable terms, either as to premium or construction. The most satisfactory security is afforded for their ability to meet all probable losses, as besides a Capital of Half authorised by law, a great portion of which is paid in and well secured, they have a reserved fund of upwards of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS to meet any unusual demand that may be made upon them.

A MILLION OF DOLLARS,

The very trifle required to be paid down in order to save the insured from serious loss, or perhaps total ruin should be a sufficient inducement with every one, whether Trader, Manufacturer, or Merchant, to avail himself of the opportunity offered to perform a duty so essentially important to their families and themselves.

Application will be received and answered without a moment's delay by JOB BACON, Sec'ry.

Cough Drops, or Indian Specific,

For the cure of Coughs, Colds and Approaching Consumptions.

TESTIMONIALS.

Lancaster County, ss.

For the information of the public, I do hereby certify, that the following persons whose names are herein mentioned, personally appeared before me, the subscriber, one of the aldermen of the city of Lancaster, and being duly sworn or affirmed, severally deposed and declared, that they had made use of Dr. Clarkson Freeman's Cough Drops, (or Indian Specific) upon themselves, with the greatest success, for the curing of coughs, colds, asthma, consumption, spitting of blood and diseases of the breast and lungs—and that in every instance, their effects were complete and infallible, will fully appear by the following testimony of those who have used them:

Peter Albright, aged 56, of the city of Lancaster.—Conrad Mixel, aged 31 years, Lancaster county. John Barr, of New Castle county, (Del.) aged 27. Elizabeth M'Kew, aged 56, of Lancaster county. Benjamin Wilson, aged 33 years, Bucks county 2 years ill. Nathan Jones, aged 27. Jacob Bollenberger, aged 36. John Burglin, aged 30. Adam Werfell, aged 48, of Lancaster county. Each of the above named persons laboured under most violent coughs, pains and stitches in their sides and breast, for a long time, accompanied with night sweats, hectic fevers, &c. were completely cured by using a few bottles of Indian Specific. Severally sworn and affirmed to, 1819.

Henry Ratze, aged 26, of Strasburg, Lancaster county, a long time exceeding ill with a violent cough, pain and stitches in his sides and breast, hectic fever and night sweats, and every symptom of consumption—a complete cure by using his Indian Specific, in a very short time, and is now one year and no return, and continues well and healthy. Affirmed and subscribed to, Sept. 20th, 1823.

Sworn or affirmed to their respective statements, on the dates to each respectively annexed, before me.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto affixed my hand and seal, this 4th day of February, 1824, in the city of Lancaster. SAMUEL DALE, (L. S.)

He begs to inform the public, that NONE ARE GENUINE WITHOUT HIS SIGNATURE—a base composition has been attempted to be imposed on the public, by a counterfeit imitation of his valuable medicine. oct 5—tf

TROTTER'S
PECTORAL BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

COUGHS and Colds, even in their first stages, not only affect the lungs, and debilitate the constitution, but absolutely destroy them. Persons afflicted with Coughs or Colds, generally presume they will subside spontaneously, but how vain is this presumption! Such persons do in the language of the sentled and admirable Armstrong, forget they are

On the source
Of fatal woes, a Cough that foams with blood,
Asthmas, and inflammation of the lungs
Or the slow mourings of the hectic fire.

The true cause of these complaints, namely Coughs and Colds, is a suppression of perspiration. The cold, the damp, the wet weather, or the frequent changes which take place in the atmosphere, occasion the body to become affected. In consequence of that, the pores and outlets of the skin, which in time of health are always breathing out a fine fluid, become so shut up, that the perspirable matter, instead of circulating freely through the system, recoils upon the blood, fills the vessels superabundantly, and vitiates its quality. Hence originates the Cough or Cold, though slight, settles upon the lungs, often terminates in Habitual Cough, or consumptive decline, or Inflammation of the Lungs, or in the calamitous disorder of a Consumption.

About 2000 years has the herb (Horehound) from which the PECTORAL BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is prepared, been held in the highest estimation. In old Coughs, even of long standing Asthmas, this medicine is decidedly the most safe and effectual remedy. Persons afflicted with Wheezing or Hoarseness, a straightness of the breast accompanied with Cough, or Difficulty of Breathing, slight Coughs or Colds, cannot have recourse to a more excellent Medicine, in the disorders of Consumptions, and against the calamitous effects of which it is also peculiarly excellent. It creates appetite in the consumptive individual, and nourishes the constitution of those persons, which have been shattered by a distressing Cough, a severe Cold, &c. &c. and invigorates so as to restore them to the blessings of pristine health and vigor.

The true Pectoral Balsam of Horehound is sold in Philadelphia, by SMITH & FRAKSALL, Market street, and ELLIS & GRIFFITHS, Chesnut street; in New York, by HULL & BOWNE, Pearl street, and C. HULL & Co. 224 Broadway. oct 25—3m

WATCHES.

THE subscriber offers to the public, a few of the newly invented Repeating Watches of Jappy and Co.—These watches, as they are less complex, are less liable to get out of order than those on the old principle, and not half the expense for cleaning.

There is no repeating mainspring in the above watches. The other end of the fine mainspring, pressing upon the striking work, the Ratchet-wheel connected with the striking work, the Ratchet-wheel commences the repeating power to the train, without in the least degree interfering with the time. There is no chain, no pivot, and but one barrel, which, with their attendant complications are done away with. The wheel which designates the hours, is started in the ordinary way, by the canon pinion, but by being divided into semicircles; though it contains twenty four teeth, and is moved one tooth every hour, yet its two divisions by an ingeniously simple connection produce twice twelve, every revolution, as the regular hours and quarters. The advantage is thus particular, in order to lead watchmakers into a close examination. Any of the lead watchmakers into a close examination. Any of the repeating work can be repaired without taking down the fine part of the watch; and a fair compensation for cleaning the whole would not exceed $1 50.

Retail price, warranted one year, for the above Watches, $15

And afterwards warranted for any length of time, for $1 50 per year.

Gold and silver Levers, Lepines, gold and silver Horizontals with second, together with nearly all the different kinds of Watches, new as well as second handed, wholesale and retail. Many of the second handed Watches, both gold and silver, are sold at little more than one half of what they formerly cost.

Watches of every kind carefully cleaned and repaired.

SWAIM'S PANACEA.

THIS public Medicine has attained a distinction which few proprietary articles can acquire. As a purifier of the blood it has no parallel. It is the most exalted agent and supreme alterative ever known. All those who are afflicted with scrofulous Leprosy, scurvy, or cutaneous Eruptions, or any of those unhealthy disorders arising from impurity of the blood and juices—also, those who suffer by diseased Liver, Rheumatic affections, or from indigestion of their youth, or those whose constitutions are broken down by mercurial, antimonial, or equivocal medicines, should submit to a course of Swaim's Panacea. The effect of this Medicine is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasure, and required only the common precautions of moderation in diet. It is recommended by the circulating Roots, and corrects their tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a rule, though a powerful alterative for mercurial and remorseless evils which an unnecessarily use of that mineral sometimes occasions, &c.

In all complaints and cases of Scrofula and Syphilis, and where the Syphilitic virus of the parent causes a development of Scrofula in the child, this is the only remedy upon which a single hope of recovery can be reasonably founded; there has been no instance of its failure, when properly used. It imparts vigour to the whole system while the cure is going on—in operation as deep seated life in man by the medical world; at the same time the patient is enabled to take nourishing food, which under the common modes of practice, is usually withheld from the sufferer. In most instances where the horrible ravages of ulceration had laid bare ligament and bone, and where, to all appearance, inhuman means but imputation could have saved life, in cases extreme as even here described, have patients been snatched from the grave and restored to good health, and the devouring disease completely eradicated. The discovery of a remedy like this now offered for sale has been a Deliverance from time immemorial.

The Proprietor does not suppose his bare assertion will convince; he will therefore give references to such as have been cured, and those under his care, among whom are many highly respectable citizens, that shall exhibit the most incredulous of its superior efficacy in the disorders for which it is here recommended. Every member of society should aid in diffusing information of this discovery—humanity alone makes it a duty.
